yes, passaic dredging (in front of diamond alkali) is done (about 2 weeks ago), sediment processing is done, and now they're just backfilling and taking things apart.

hi zoe -- here are three good on-line resources you can pass along -- EPA does develop standards for wood stoves, and in fact we have new rules coming out this summer...

but, basically, as for your particular constituent, it is a local issue...

Hello again. Any good responses for our constituent concerned with wood burning stoves?

Casework?

I am trying to change the ignorant mentality of some of the residents in my communities. I have already spoken to my mayor and she has visited my home along with a councilmember. This wood stove situation is killing us with its toxic smoke and smell. Why not switch over to wood pellet stoves instead if you MUST burn. This causes cancer and other health problems. Do I have to be dying before someone listens? I am begging to speak to you. I need you and other politicians to get on board and make more statewide changes to this wood burning...and I am tired of hearing that oil is expensive. Some townships have forced us to switch over to public sewers from septs so why not wood stoves? Some stoves are 100 years old and are NOT EPA approved. Please please please allow me to meet with you to discuss this and try to push through some changes...please. I am not selling my home or moving to another state...I need your help..please.
